followed the publication of his successful hoax:

"The story having been once published it passed out of my hands. From that it passed out of my hands. From that moment it has gradually acquired different accessories, for which I am not responsible. Thus I have heard it said that at one bureau of the Navy Department they say that Nolan was pardoned in fact, and returned home to die. At another bureau, I am told, the answer to questions is, that though it is true that an officer was kept ahroad all his life, his name was not Now ho discredits all tradition, still recollects this 'Nolan court martial."

"One of the most accurate of my fanely emphatic expression on our national policy, denouncing the government in unmeasured terms, in expecting that the Southern people would tamely submit to taxation for the payment of the public debt. His conduct at last became so indecorous and violent that it passed the bounds of toleration, and Mr. Clark permuterily ordered him to leave the office. He replied to the order by slowly retreating to the door, the knob of which he retained for a moment in order to still further define his position. He was again directed to leave the room, and thinking discretion the better part of valor, complete with the order.—Washingston dispatch to the Cincinnoth Gazette.

"One of the most accurate of my ounger friends had noticed Nolan's younger friends had noticed Nolan's death in the newspaper, but recollected that it was in September, and not in August." A lady in Baltimore writes me, I believe in good faith, that Nolan has two widowed sisters residing in that neighborhood. A correspondent of the Philadelphia Despatch believed the article untrue, as the United States corvette Levant was lost at two nearly these corve Levant was lost at sea nearly three years since, between San Francisco and San Juan. I may remark that this uncertainty as to the place of her loss rather adds to the probability of her turning up after three years in latitude 2° 11' south, longitude 131° west. A writer in the New Orleans Picayana, in a careful historical paper, explained at length that I had been mistaken all through; that Philip Nolan never went to sea but to Texas; that there he was shot in battle, March 21, 1801, and by orders from Spain every fifth man of his party was to be sharen 21, 1801, and by orders from Spain every fifth man of his party was to be shot, had they not died in prison. Fortunately, however, he left his papers and maps, which fell into the hands of a friend cli of the Picayane's correspondent. The friend proposes to publish them; and the of the Picayane's correspondent. The friend proposes to publish them; and the public will then have, it is to be hoped, the true history of Philip Nolan, the man without a country.

"With all these continuations, however, I have nothing to do. I can only repeat I have nothing to do. I can only repeat that my Philip Nolan is pure fiction. I cannot send his scrapbook to my friend who asks for it, because I have it not to 1865. He concludes thus:

"A Boston paper, in noticing the story of 'My Double, contained in another part of this collection, said it was highly improbable. I have always agreed with that title. I confess I have always agreed with that title. I confess I have always agreed with that title. I confess I have always agreed with that nero is in two or three places at the same time, under a process wholly impossible under any conceivable administration of under any conceivable administration of affairs. Artemus Ward, His Publisher. A certain John Camden Hatten, a Pic though be assumes the air of a grave and profound critic of American humor and an expounder of Americanisms, he may be, after all, a "goaker" who means to rival the famous showman. In his introduction, Hatten says: "The intermixture of numerals with the text, as in 'going 2 see him, 'going 4 2 see him,' be 4,' &t., may be looked upon as mere pieces of eccentricity, a sort of rebus fun, or (sie) mayhap a notion on Mr. Ward's part that is the correct thing and shows part that is the correct thing and shows education to abbreviate one's speech." (') On the next page, explaining A. Ward's allusion to his wax figure of "Dr. Webster in his act of killing Dr. Parkman, Hatten confides to the render, in a fact note, that this was "a murder committed in New York a few years since," &c.—Apropose of the word "kerslap," we are given the following ctymological touch: "A variation of the Americanisms Kestlap," where the committee of the co osh, Kesouse-i.e., the noise made by a body falling into the water. In the South-west a number of fanciful words of this sort are used, in all of which the first syl-lable-which is unaccented-is subject to lable—which is unaccented—is subject to the same variety of spelling." Again we have "Sucket alive—a common New England exclamation of astenishment at what has been said or done," "Pesky—confoundedly, exclusively, a New England expression, the origin of which lexicographers have not been able to determine." You may judge of the rest by this. As for Ward's book, it has had, through ingenious puffing, a considerable sale in this country; but has only taken hold on such satirists of the United States as wish to turn Americans to ridicule, by persuading coundedly, exclusively, a New Engine expression, the origin of which lexicographers have not been able to determine.
